Steven L. Daniels is a partner in the firm's West Palm Beach and Boca Raton offices, concentrating in real estate and condominium/community association law.

Steven has extensive experience in real estate law including development, financing, loan workouts and restructurings, condominiums and non-condominiums, landlord/tenant and zoning. For the past 30 years, Steven has represented major institutions, structuring complex commercial, residential, equestrian and industrial real estate transactions including converting existing commercial, industrial and residential properties to condominiums, and has worked with developers, lenders and quasi-legislative state agencies in loan workout negotiation and documentation. Steven's real estate practice includes the financing, purchase, development and sale of equestrian properties, shopping centers, warehouses, office buildings, apartment buildings and raw land, as well as large residential developments. In addition, he has represented hundreds of condominium and homeowner associations in the South Florida area, including both unit owner controlled associations and developer controlled associations. His corporate practice includes representing closely-held corporations in the restaurant, retail, medical and service industries.

Steven has lectured on various topics for the Palm Beach County Bar Association, The University of Miami Condominium & Cluster Development Institutes, The Florida Bar and Association of Realtors and the Town of South Palm Beach. He is also involved in the community having led several nonprofits in South Florida.
