Saul Ewing LLP has added two litigators previously with Moritt Hock & Hamroff LLP as partners in its New York office, the firm announced Monday.

James Chou and Peter Zlotnick will work as part of Saul Ewing's litigation practice, where they will focus on assisting individuals and companies with a broad range of litigation needs, according to the firm's announcement.

"[Chou and Zlotnick] are seasoned litigators and trial lawyers who are well-versed in helping clients navigate sophisticated business disputes both in and out of the courtroom," Laurie Kamaiko, the managing partner of Saul Ewing's New York office, said in a statement Monday. "Their experience, including their work as trial lawyers, is well-suited to the needs of clients across our footprint, but especially in our steadily growing New York office."

Chou focuses his practice on assisting clients such as private equity firms, hedge funds, financial institutions, insurance carriers, and manufacturers and distributors of consumer products with their commercial and business litigation needs, according to Saul Ewing.

He has experience dealing with matters such as fraud, misappropriation of trade secrets, breach of contract or fiduciary duty, and breach of restrictive covenants and corporate espionage claims, according to the firm.

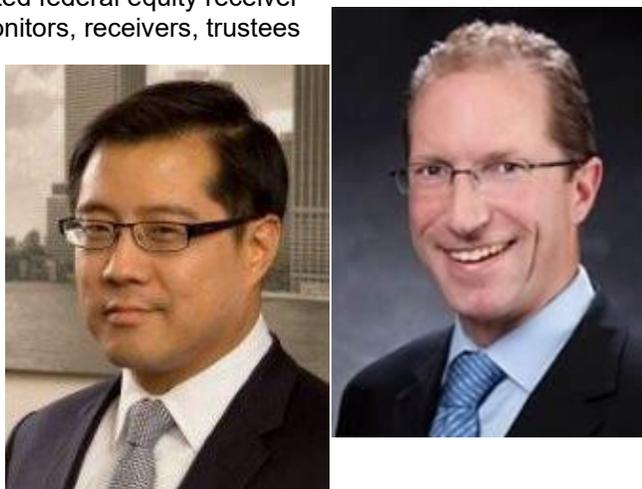

Chou also works as outside counsel for various middle-market, privately held companies that need help dealing with their respective legal issues and requirements.

Zlotnick focuses his practice on assisting high-net-worth individuals, private equity firms, financial institutions and businesses with litigation matters before trial and appellate courts, alternative dispute resolution bodies, and administrative and regulatory agencies, according to Saul Ewing.

He also has experience serving as a court-appointed federal equity receiver and special master and representing corporate monitors, receivers, trustees and public fiduciaries with enforcement proceedings and actions brought by federal regulatory agencies, according to the firm.

"I never take my clients' trust for granted, and from the beginning of my Saul Ewing journey, each person at the firm whom I met embodied this spirit," said Zlotnick in an email to Law360 Pulse on Wednesday. "At the heart of this outlook is my view that nothing good in life is guaranteed; you have to earn it."

Chou could not be reached for comment Monday.

Chou received his legal degree from Georgetown University Law Center, while Zlotnick received his legal degree from Benjamin N. Cardozo School of Law at Yeshiva University.

Saul Ewing has more than 400 attorneys working out of 18 locations in the United States.
