Saul Ewing LLP recently expanded its transactional team in its Philadelphia office with the addition of an attorney who moved his practice from Montgomery McCracken Walker & Rhoads LLP after more than three years.

Michael Duffy was welcomed this week as a partner in Saul Ewing's corporate practice in the Philadelphia office, the firm announced Thursday. Duffy told Law360 Pulse in an interview Friday that he joined Saul Ewing to "accommodate the needs of his growing practice and better serve his clients' needs."

"Saul Ewing is a growing, dynamic firm with an outstanding corporate group," Duffy said. "As my practice continues to grow, I am looking for more resources and the support of a full team required to complete complex transactions. Saul Ewing has a great bench and a real team-oriented atmosphere where everybody cooperates and works toward a common goal together."

Duffy's practice represents clients who are either selling businesses or seeking investment opportunities. His work includes handling transactional matters such as debt and equity financings, investment fund formations and venture capital financing.

Duffy also advises clients with start-up companies with issues including negotiating and drafting organizational documents and agreements for intellectual property licensing.

"I like to understand my clients' businesses," Duffy said. "I started out as a litigator and getting into types of civil matters that came up from a bad transaction. I saw how things can go wrong after the fact with those disputes and decided I wanted to help build and grow a business by doing everything right at the beginning."

Duffy earned his law degree from Rutgers Law School in 2011 and practiced at Mitts Law LLC for more than nine years before joining Montgomery McCracken in February 2022.

Amy Piccola, managing partner of Saul Ewing's Philadelphia office, said in a statement that the firm is "thrilled" to add Duffy to the team.

"Michael possesses a deep understanding of the legal intricacies involved when a client sells, buys or invests in a company and seeks the financing necessary to support these deals," Piccola said. "His experience with business transactions is not only extensive but also spans from start-ups to well-established enterprises."
