

2019 WL 1983530

United States Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit.

CONSUMER FINANCIAL PROTECTION
BUREAU, Petitioner-Appellee,

v.

SEILA LAW LLC, Respondent-Appellant.

No. 17-56324

Argued and Submitted January 8, 2019 Pasadena,
California

Filed May 6, 2019

Synopsis

Background: Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) filed petition to enforce civil investigative demand (CID) that it issued as part of its investigation into whether law firm violated the Telemarketing Sales Rule in the course of providing debt-relief services to its clients. The United States District Court for the Central District of California, Josephine L. Staton, J., 2017 WL 6536586, granted petition and ordered firm to comply with the CID, subject to one uncontested modification. Firm appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Watford, Circuit Judge, held that:

[1] structure of the CFPB, which is headed by a single director who can be removed by the President only for cause, is constitutionally permissible;

[2] the CID did not violate the Consumer Financial Protection Act's practice-of-law exclusion; and

[3] the CID did not violate the provision of the Act requiring CIDs to state the nature of the conduct constituting the alleged violation which is under investigation and the provision of law applicable to such violation.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (8)

[1] Finance, Banking, and Credit

🔑 Jurisdiction and authority

Consumer Financial Protection Act confers upon the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) a broad array of powers to implement and enforce federal consumer financial laws. 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 5481-5603.

Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Finance, Banking, and Credit

🔑 Jurisdiction and authority

Powers of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) include, among other things, the authority to promulgate rules, conduct investigations, adjudicate administrative enforcement proceedings, and file civil actions in federal court. 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 5512, 5562, 5563, 5564.

Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Finance, Banking, and Credit

🔑 Officers and employees

Public Employment

🔑 Multiple decisionmakers; confirmation or other approval

Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) is led by a single director appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. 12 U.S.C.A. § 5491(b).

Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Finance, Banking, and Credit

🔑 Officers and employees

Public Employment

🔑 Cause in general

Director of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) may be removed by the President only “for cause.” 12 U.S.C.A. § 5491(c)(3).

Cases that cite this headnote

[5]

Constitutional Law

🔑 Public employment

Finance, Banking, and Credit

🔑 Officers and employees

Public Employment

🔑 Cause in general

Structure of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB), which is headed by single director who exercises substantial executive power and may be removed by the President only for cause, is constitutionally permissible, notwithstanding separation-of-powers challenge; CFPB exercises quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial powers, it was permissible for Congress, in creating CFPB, to seek to ensure that agency discharges those responsibilities independently of the President’s will, particularly in light of CFPB’s role as financial regulator, which has historically been viewed as calling for a measure of independence from Executive Branch control, and for-cause removal restriction protecting director does not impede the President’s ability to ensure that the laws are faithfully executed. U.S. Const. art. 3, § 1 et seq.; 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 5481-5603.

Cases that cite this headnote

[6]

Courts

🔑 Supreme Court decisions

Though the Supreme Court is free to revisit Supreme Court precedent, the Court of Appeals is not.

Cases that cite this headnote

[7]

Finance, Banking, and Credit

🔑 Investigations and examinations

Civil investigative demand (CID) issued by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) as part of investigation into whether law firm violated the Telemarketing Sales Rule in the course of providing debt-relief services to its clients did not violate the Consumer Financial Protection Act’s practice-of-law exclusion; exception to the practice-of-law exclusion applied to the CFPB’s enforcement of the Telemarketing Sales Rule, a consumer law that does not exempt attorneys from its coverage even when they are engaged in providing legal services. 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 5517(e)(1), 5517(e)(3); 15 U.S.C.A. § 6102; 16 C.F.R. § 310.1 et seq.

Cases that cite this headnote

[8]

Finance, Banking, and Credit

🔑 Investigations and examinations

Civil investigative demand (CID) issued by the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) as part of investigation into whether law firm violated the Telemarketing Sales Rule in the course of providing debt-relief services to its clients sufficiently put firm on notice of nature of conduct investigated where agency identified the allegedly illegal conduct under investigation as “whether debt relief providers, lead generators, or other unnamed persons are engaging in unlawful acts or practices in the advertising, marketing, or sale of debt relief services or products, including but not limited to debt negotiation, debt elimination, debt settlement, and credit counseling,” and then specified the sections of the Consumer Financial Protection Act applicable to the alleged violations. 12 U.S.C.A. §§ 5481, 5531, 5536, 5562(c)(2); 16 C.F.R. § 310.1 et seq.

Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

Anthony Bisconti (argued) and Thomas H. Bienert Jr., Bienert Miller & Katzman PLC, San Clemente, California, for Respondent-Appellant.

Kevin E. Friedl (argued) and Christopher J. Deal, Attorneys; Steven Y. Bressler, Assistant General Counsel; John R. Coleman, Deputy General Counsel; Mary McLeod, General Counsel; Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, Washington, D.C.; for Petitioner-Appellee.

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Central District of California, Josephine L. Staton, District Judge, Presiding, D.C. No. 8:17-cv-01081-JLS-JEM

Before: Susan P. Graber and Paul J. Watford, Circuit Judges, and Jack Zouhary,* District Judge.

OPINION

WATFORD, Circuit Judge:

The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) is investigating Seila Law LLC, a law firm that provides a wide range of legal services to its clients, including debt-relief services. The CFPB is seeking to determine whether Seila Law violated the Telemarketing Sales Rule, 16 C.F.R. pt. 310, in the course of providing debt-relief services to consumers. As part of its investigation, the CFPB issued a civil investigative demand (CID) to Seila Law that requires the firm to respond to seven interrogatories and four requests for documents. See 12 U.S.C. § 5562(c)(1). After Seila Law refused to comply with the CID, the CFPB filed a petition in the district court to enforce compliance. See § 5562(e)(1). The district court granted the petition and ordered Seila Law to comply with the CID, subject to one modification that the CFPB does not contest. Seila Law challenges the district court’s order on two grounds, both of which we reject.

I

Seila Law’s main argument is that the CFPB is unconstitutionally structured, thereby rendering the CID (and everything else the agency has done) unlawful. Specifically, Seila Law argues that the CFPB’s structure violates the Constitution’s separation of powers because the agency is headed by a single Director who exercises substantial executive power but can be removed by the President only for cause. The arguments for and against that view have been thoroughly canvassed in the majority, concurring, and dissenting opinions in PHH Corp. v. CFPB, 881 F.3d 75 (D.C. Cir. 2018) (en banc). We see no need to re-plow the same ground here. After providing a summary of the CFPB’s structure, we explain in brief why we agree with the conclusion reached by the PHH Corp. majority.

*2 ¹¹ ¹² Congress created the CFPB in 2010 when it enacted the Consumer Financial Protection Act, 12 U.S.C. §§ 5481–5603. The Act confers upon the CFPB a broad array of powers to implement and enforce federal consumer financial laws, with the overarching goals of “ensuring that all consumers have access to markets for consumer financial products and services and that markets for consumer financial products and services are fair, transparent, and competitive.” 12 U.S.C. § 5511(a). The agency’s powers include, among other things, the authority to promulgate rules (§ 5512), conduct investigations (§ 5562), adjudicate administrative enforcement proceedings (§ 5563), and file civil actions in federal court (§ 5564). Congress classified the CFPB as “an Executive agency” and chose to house it within the Federal Reserve System. § 5491(a).

¹³ ¹⁴ The CFPB is led by a single Director appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. § 5491(b). The Director serves for a term of five years that may be extended until a successor has been appointed and confirmed. § 5491(c)(1)–(2). The Director may be removed by the President only for “inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office.” § 5491(c)(3). A provision of this sort is commonly referred to as a “for cause” restriction on the President’s removal authority.

¹⁵ Seila Law contends that an agency with the CFPB’s broad law-enforcement powers may not be headed by a single Director removable by the President only for cause. That argument is not without force. The Director exercises substantial executive power similar to the power exercised by heads of Executive Branch departments, at least some of whom, it has long been assumed, must be removable by the President at will. The Supreme Court’s separation-of-powers decisions, in particular Humphrey’s Executor v. United States, 295 U.S. 602, 55 S.Ct. 869, 79

L.Ed. 1611 (1935), and Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 108 S.Ct. 2597, 101 L.Ed.2d 569 (1988), nonetheless lead us to conclude that the CFPB's structure is constitutionally permissible.

In Humphrey's Executor, the Court rejected a separation-of-powers challenge to the structure of the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), an agency similar in character to the CFPB. The petitioner in that case argued that the FTC's structure violates Article II of the Constitution because the agency's five Commissioners, although appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, may be removed by the President only for cause. The Court rejected that argument, relying heavily on its determination that the agency exercised mostly quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial powers, rather than purely executive powers. 295 U.S. at 628, 631–32, 55 S.Ct. 869. The Court reasoned that it was permissible for Congress to decide, “in creating quasi-legislative or quasi-judicial agencies, to require them to act in discharge of their duties independently of executive control.” Id. at 629, 55 S.Ct. 869. The for-cause removal restriction at issue there, the Court concluded, was a permissible means of ensuring that the FTC's Commissioners would “maintain an attitude of independence” from the President's control. Id.

This reasoning, it seems to us, applies equally to the CFPB, whose Director is subject to the same for-cause removal restriction at issue in Humphrey's Executor. Like the FTC, the CFPB exercises quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial powers, and Congress could therefore seek to ensure that the agency discharges those responsibilities independently of the President's will. In addition, as the PHH Corp. majority noted, the CFPB acts in part as a financial regulator, a role that has historically been viewed as calling for a measure of independence from Executive Branch control. 881 F.3d at 91–92.

To be sure, there are differences between the CFPB and the FTC as it existed when Humphrey's Executor was decided in 1935. The Court's subsequent decision in Morrison v. Olson, however, precludes us from relying on those differences as a basis for distinguishing Humphrey's Executor.

*3 The most prominent difference between the two agencies is that, while both exercise quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial powers, the CFPB possesses substantially more executive power than the FTC did back in 1935. But Congress has since conferred executive functions of similar scope upon the FTC, and the Court in Morrison suggested that this change in the mix of agency powers has not undermined the constitutionality of the FTC. See Morrison, 487 U.S. at 692 n.31, 108 S.Ct. 2597. Indeed, in Morrison the Court upheld the constitutionality of a for-cause removal restriction for an official exercising one of the most significant forms of executive authority: the power to investigate and prosecute criminal wrongdoing. And more recently, in Free Enterprise Fund v. Public Company Accounting Oversight Board, 561 U.S. 477, 130 S.Ct. 3138, 177 L.Ed.2d 706 (2010), the Court left undisturbed a for-cause removal restriction for Commissioners of the Securities and Exchange Commission, who are charged with overseeing a board that exercises “significant executive power.” Id. at 514, 130 S.Ct. 3138.

The other notable difference between the two agencies is that the CFPB is headed by a single Director whereas the FTC is headed by five Commissioners. Some have found this structural difference dispositive for separation-of-powers purposes. See PHH Corp., 881 F.3d at 165–66 (Kavanaugh, J., dissenting). But as the PHH Corp. majority noted, see id. at 98–99, the Supreme Court's decision in Humphrey's Executor did not appear to turn on the fact that the FTC was headed by five Commissioners rather than a single individual. The Court made no mention of the agency's multi-member leadership structure when analyzing the constitutional validity of the for-cause removal restriction at issue. See Humphrey's Executor, 295 U.S. at 626–31, 55 S.Ct. 869. And the Court's subsequent decision in Morrison seems to preclude drawing a constitutional distinction between multi-member and single-individual leadership structures, since the Court in that case upheld a for-cause removal restriction for a prosecutorial entity headed by a single independent counsel. 487 U.S. at 696–97, 108 S.Ct. 2597; see PHH Corp., 881 F.3d at 113 (Tatel, J., concurring). As the PHH Corp. majority noted, if an agency's leadership is protected by a for-cause removal restriction, the President can arguably exert more effective control over the agency if it is headed by a single individual rather than a multi-member body. See 881 F.3d at 97–98.

¹⁶In short, we view Humphrey's Executor and Morrison as controlling here. Those cases indicate that the for-cause removal restriction protecting the CFPB's Director does not “impede the President's ability to perform his constitutional duty” to ensure that the laws are faithfully executed. Morrison, 487 U.S. at 691, 108 S.Ct. 2597. The Supreme Court is of course free to revisit those precedents, but we are not.

Seila Law next argues that the CFPB lacked statutory authority to issue the CID. It asserts two separate grounds in support of this argument.

¹⁷First, Seila Law contends that the CID violates the Consumer Financial Protection Act’s practice-of-law exclusion. That exclusion provides, with important exceptions, that the CFPB “may not exercise any supervisory or enforcement authority with respect to an activity engaged in by an attorney as part of the practice of law under the laws of a State in which the attorney is licensed to practice law.” 12 U.S.C. § 5517(e)(1). Seila Law argues that the CID is invalid because it requests information related to Seila Law’s activities in providing legal services to its clients. Specifically, the CID seeks information relevant to determining whether Seila Law has violated the Telemarketing Sales Rule “in the advertising, marketing, or sale of debt relief services or products, including but not limited to debt negotiation, debt elimination, debt settlement, and credit counseling.”

The district court correctly held that one of the exceptions to § 5517(e)(1)’s practice-of-law exclusion applies here. Section 5517(e)(3) states: “Paragraph (1) shall not be construed so as to limit the authority of the Bureau with respect to any attorney, to the extent that such attorney is otherwise subject to any of the enumerated consumer laws or the authorities transferred under subtitle F or H.” Subtitle H empowers the CFPB to enforce the Telemarketing Sales Rule, 16 C.F.R. pt. 310, a consumer law that does not exempt attorneys from its coverage even when they are engaged in providing legal services. See 15 U.S.C. § 6102; Telemarketing Sales Rule, 75 Fed. Reg. 48,458-01, 48,467-69 (Aug. 10, 2010). The CFPB thus has the authority to investigate whether Seila Law is violating the Telemarketing Sales Rule, without regard to the general practice-of-law exclusion stated in § 5517(e)(1).

*⁴ ¹⁸Second, Seila Law contends that the CID violates 12 U.S.C. § 5562(c)(2), which provides that “[e]ach civil investigative demand shall state the nature of the conduct constituting the alleged violation which is under investigation and the provision of law applicable to such violation.” The CID at issue here fully complies with this provision. It identifies the allegedly illegal conduct under investigation as follows: “whether debt relief providers, lead generators, or other unnamed persons are engaging in unlawful acts or practices in the advertising, marketing, or sale of debt relief services or products, including but not limited to debt negotiation, debt elimination, debt settlement, and credit counseling.” The CID also identifies the provision of law applicable to the alleged violation as “Sections 1031 and 1036 of the Consumer Financial Protection Act of 2010, 12 U.S.C. §§ 5531, 5536; 12 U.S.C. § 5481 et seq., the Telemarketing Sales Rule, 16 C.F.R. § 310.1 et seq., or any other Federal consumer financial law.” That information suffices to put Seila Law on notice of the nature of the conduct the CFPB is investigating, and it is not so general as to raise vagueness or overbreadth concerns. See United States v. Morton Salt Co., 338 U.S. 632, 652, 70 S.Ct. 357, 94 L.Ed. 401 (1950).

AFFIRMED.

All Citations

--- F.3d ----, 2019 WL 1983530, 19 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 4144, 2019 Daily Journal D.A.R. 3832

Footnotes

* The Honorable Jack Zouhary, United States District Judge for the Northern District of Ohio, sitting by designation.